What previous attendees have said:

"It was fun and wonderful to keep learning. A great faculty and wonderful hosts!

"This seminar is an interesting and provocative forum for divergent views. Excellent Job!"

The 2017 Santa Fe Advanced Natural Resource Damages Conference is celebrating more than a decade as one of the leading NRD conferences in the nation. It will again feature an incredible faculty and program-complemented this year with an optional river rafting excursion.

The conference will focus on the work of the Obama Administration and the transition of federal environmental policy under the Trump Administration including the impact on what to expect from federal trustees in the years ahead. The changes in federal policy are likely to result in adaptive changes by state and tribal trustees. NGOs may step forward to a greater extent.

The conference will also feature the latest on legal issues relating to NRD assessments and litigation, including potential changes in Chevron deference, issues presented by lack of agreement among trustees, special issues for multi-district NRD litigation, lessons from development of new scientific evidence in Deepwater Horizon, and issues relating to the admissibility of scientific evidence in NRD cases.

Today, the stakes presented by NRD assessments and litigation have grown to staggering proportions. As the Chairs of this Conference, we are proud to bring the leaders in natural resources policy, science and litigation together to tackle many of the most pressing and difficult environmental issues of our time in a forum that facilitates interaction among all of the participants and faculty in the extraordinary city of Santa Fe.
